

EngagementHQ

Online Community Engagement

EngagementHQ is a flexible online community engagement portal that meets the needs of organizations that recognize the value of community input to their decisions.

Organizations do it because someone in a decision making capacity wants to hear the community's views.

"Online community engagement reaches many more people than most other methods of engagement. It is affordable, easy, safe and respectful... and our community likes it"

No matter how sophisticated, all non-web based methods of engagement have significant barriers to participation: you either have to break your busy routine to attend an event or you have to write a submission.

Current consultation processes inevitably only reach part of a community or stakeholder group. However, the internet provides an opportunity to give vastly more people access to information and to have their say and contribute intelligently to the decisions that affect their lives.

Until now the main barriers to engaging communities online were related to technology and the time and cost of setting up effective mechanisms to engage. As long as these barriers to participation persist then we will only hear from a minority of the community.

EngagementHQ has now removed those barriers and offers tools for engaging in collaborative learning, discussion, and debate.

It is an inexpensive and accessible way for the public to openly discuss a wide variety of topics, comment on projects or initiatives, or simple to debate public policy in the comfort of their homes.

SustainNet specialises in hosting online community engagement for our customers. These discussions are independently moderated by us according to the 'rules of the site' set out in a community engagement charter. Our moderators work to ensure that the sites remain a safe and relevant environment to discuss the issues.
